The INNATE Awakens!

As you know, the sacrum and the occiput are reciprocally connected in the human. Temporal bones are thus married to the Iliac.

The microscopic reciprocal motion of the temporal bones is essential for optimal function in health. Major Bertrand De Jarnette taught the importance of this cranial function and described temporal bone motion with many daily activities such as walking and turning your head. Did you know that the temporal bones reciprocally move, under normal conditions, every time one looks left, or right? If this motion is limited, restricted or absent, neurological dysfunction occurs and disease begins.

Come to Denver for the SORSI Homecoming and gain insight and understanding into essential cranial function. You will also be offered a rare opportunity to engage in pertinent and meaningful chiropractic research.

Looking forward to seeing you there.
